5 HEALTH BENEFITS OF GARDENING:

Spending time outdoors in the garden can benefit your physical, mental and emotional health.

1. Improved immune system. Bacteria found in garden soil can improve your immune system and has been known to alleviate symptoms of allergies, asthma, psoriasis and depression.

2. Relieves stress and anxiety. A study in the Journal of Health Psychology stated that gardening can lower cortisol levels in your brain. Cortisol, necessary for sustaining body functions, is also known as the stress hormone. Too much can cause your blood pressure & glucose levels to fluctuate.

3. May reduce risk of dementia. Gardening requires using critical functions including dexterity and sensory awareness.

4. Good exercise. Even light exercise can slow down the aging process. All gardening activities will help get you moving.

5. Happy mood booster. Fresh air and sunshine can do wonders for your mood and your health. The sun's rays help your body produce vitamin D and boost serotonin levels in your brain to help improve your mood and help you feel calm and centered. This is great for people who suffer from seasonal depression. (Remember to wear sunscreen, sunglasses and a hat when gardening to help protect yourself from the harmful UV rays that cause sunburn.)
